

An aerial view of a European town square, likely in Strasbourg, France. The square is surrounded by historic buildings with multiple stories and windows. In the foreground, there is a cafe with outdoor seating under white umbrellas. A sign for 'HOTEL CATHEDRALE' is visible on the left, and a sign for 'OFFICE DE TOURISME' is visible on the right. The text 'Incontinence salivaire ou Troubles de la déglutition' is overlaid in large yellow letters with a white outline.

An anatomical dissection of a jaw, likely a maxilla, is shown. The bone is held in a metal surgical frame. A large, reddish, fleshy mass is visible on the surface of the bone. Several surgical instruments, including forceps and a scalpel, are positioned around the dissection. The background is a light blue surgical drape.
